

MORNING LEADER. PUBLISHED BY E. COWLES & CO. TUESDAY MORNING, AUG. 17, 1858.

PLAIN AND ORNAMENTAL PRINTING. The Office of the Morning Leader is at the corner of the State and Franklin streets, in the building formerly occupied by the Ohio State Printing House. The office is open from 8 o'clock in the morning till 5 o'clock in the evening. The office is open from 8 o'clock in the morning till 5 o'clock in the evening.

By Telegraph Direct from GREAT BRITAIN!

QUEEN'S MESSAGE!

Atlantic Cable a Fixed Success!!

We have the pleasure of laying before our readers the long expected Message of the Queen of Great Britain to the President of the United States—just received by the Atlantic Cable.

THE QUEEN'S MESSAGE!

TO THE HON. THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.—Her Majesty desires to congratulate the President upon the successful completion of this great international work in which the Queen has taken the deepest interest.

THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16, 1858. To Her Majesty Queen Victoria, Queen of Great Britain.

The President cordially reciprocates the congratulations of Her Majesty the Queen on the success of the great international enterprise accomplished by the science, skill, and indomitable energy of the two countries. It is a triumph more glorious because far more useful to mankind than was ever won by conqueror on the field of battle.

May the Atlantic Telegraph under the blessing of Heaven prove to be a bond of perpetual peace and friendship between the kindred nations, and an instrument destined by Divine Providence to diffuse religion, civilization, liberty and law throughout the world.

In this view will not all nations of Christendom spontaneously unite in the declaration that it shall be forever neutral, and that its communications shall be held sacred in the passage to their places of destination even in the midst of hostilities.

Signed, JAMES BUCHANAN.

FROM THE DIRECTORS OF THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH COMPANY IN GREAT BRITAIN TO THE DIRECTORS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Cable Station, N. Y., Aug. 16. To the Directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company, New York:

Europe and America are united by Telegraph. Glory to God in the highest, on Earth peace and good will to men. (Signed)

Directors Atlantic Telegraph Co. New York, Aug. 16—8 P. M.

The Bells of old Trinity are now ringing a merry peal, flags are flying, cannon firing—The greatest enthusiasm everywhere prevails at the joyful intelligence of the union of America and Europe by Telegraph.

To the Cleveland Daily Leader belongs the credit of issuing first the Queen's message in this city, and consequently the first despatch received here through the Atlantic Telegraph.—Leader Extra of Monday Evening.

Monday, August 16th, 1858, will ever be a proud and marked day in the World's History. The ocean-cable spoke words of cheer from Queen to President. Greetings were returned. The highest hope of both Continents is realized.

"And hereafter there shall be no chain, Save underneath the sea. The wires shall surmount thro' the main Sweet Empire of the Sea. The waters will be better. And under, through the cable wires, Her fiery errands go."

Oxford Precinct, Kansas. When Buchanan's Border Ruffians had a pro-slavery victory to win in former times, Oxford precinct never failed to honor the draft for votes wanted, whether ranging from five hundred to a thousand majority. But like Kickapoo, its glory has departed with John C. Calhoun. It has subsided into an inconceivable precinct on election days, and on the 23 of August polled but 29 votes, all told—13 Proposition Rejected, 16 Accepted, a pro-slavery majority of only three votes.

The glory of Shawnee precinct also has departed! Only a year ago Shawnee gave 800 pro-slavery majority at the command of Calhoun. The vote on the 23 of August was, for the English bill 41, against it 80!

What more conclusive proof of the many high handed frauds in Kansas election by which the Administration has labored in season and out of season to fix a pro-slavery State government on a stiff-necked and rebellious people, is needed? Kickapoo, Shawnee and Oxford have spoken—Delaware Crossing is to hear from.

Canadian Matters. Ex-Premier Brown is canvassing the Toronto district for a seat in Parliament, with great zeal and industry. The 20th inst. is the nomination day, and in case of a poll being demanded, the election is to take place on the 27th inst. J. Hilliard Cameron is the Government candidate.

Imprisonment for debt is virtually abolished in Lower Canada, and the bill of Attorney General Macdonald will doubtless become a law. The effect will be to empty the jails of Upper Canada of debtors. Now almost every jail contains debtors, many of them several. The bill has passed the Lower House.

The Opposition in Parliament, having lost leader Brown, appears to be quite powerless. The Fishery bill has passed the Upper House, and the Upper Canada Municipal bill, and a bill for the construction of an International Bridge at Niagara. Motions of want of confidence in Ministers, etc., have been rejected by decided majorities.

The Government carried resolutions on the subject of Hudson's Bay territory, taking ground against the claims of the Hudson Bay Company monopoly, and urging action to fix a boundary between Canada and the Territory.—An Address to the Throne on the subject of the Intercolonial Railway has been adopted by both Houses. Parliament was to be prorogued on the 16th, and one clock.

The State Printing and Binding. Our blessed new State Constitution attempts to regulate everything pertaining to the State, from the Judiciary down to the printing and binding, and requires that both the latter shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder. The act of 1852 requires the Secretary, Auditor and Treasurer of State to advertise for sealed proposals for the execution of the State printing for two years, and to take bonds of the lowest responsible bidders in the sum of $5,000. If they fail to give bonds within ten days, then the contract is to be given to the next lowest bidder who will give bonds as aforesaid.

At the late letting of the Public Printing, the first contract was awarded to J. H. Smith of the Ohio Statesman, $3, 33, and 4th to S. F. Turner, an employee in Follett, Foster & Co's Office, and the fifth to Thos. Wetzel & Co., an employee in the Ohio Statesman Steam Printing House. The bills were below living rates.

All the bidders, some twelve in number, declined to execute the required bonds, except George & Son, and Osgood & Pearce, on a part of their bids. The Gazette says:

The officers of State, after discussing the propriety of throwing out all the bids, and advertising for new proposals, became fully satisfied after a further examination of the law, that they had no other alternative than to give the work to the lowest bidder who would furnish the required bonds.

Accordingly the 2nd and 5th contracts were awarded to Osgood & Pearce, the 3rd and 4th to George & Son, it being understood, however, that Richard Nevins, Esq., the present State printer, would take the contracts of the 2nd, 3rd and 4th, and from certain facts within his knowledge, we have no doubt of the fact. The cost of the State printing for the two years amounts to about $15,000. The difference in price between the lowest bids offered and the lowest bids taken amount to between $4,000 and $5,000—a good speculation for the contractor, but a bad operation for the State. But it was done according to law, and who dare gainsay it!

The German printing was awarded to Reinhard & Fieser, at their bid—the only one offered—at 40 cents per line for composition, 35 cents per token for presswork, and 75 cents per thousand words for translation.

The contract for binding was awarded to Hayden Wheat, who declined giving bond. The decision system so successfully practiced with the printing proposals proved equally efficient with the binding, and all in accordance with law. It was finally awarded to Follett, Foster & Co., who gave bonds. The contract for the State binding amounts to something like $15,000 or $16,000 for the two years.

Great is the wisdom of the Constitution! It lets the State Printing and Binding to the lowest bidder—in a horn.

The Washington Union keeps up its fire on Senator Douglas without cessation, and is constantly taunting him with the ignominious betrayal he has suffered at the hands of his professed friends in Ohio. The Buchanan organ of the 11th inst., exultingly says:

"Mr. Douglas is in a most unenviable condition. No leading member of the Democratic party ever made up upon it under auspices so unpromising to his own future. He expected confidently that he would divide the party all into halves and place himself at the head of one. But his adherents in both houses of Congress are less than the smallest corporal's guard—too small to defend or carry a measure, even with the alliance of all the other enemies of the Administration. State after State repudiates or ignores him. Witness the recent action of Ohio's noble Democracy from whom he has been so long looked for a triumphant endorsement of his career! Our ranks are everywhere closing up. Mr. Douglas and his boasted broad sides are becoming less and less important every day."

On the other hand Senator Douglas spurs and defies the Washington Union. He is unsparing of his denunciations of the Administration organ, which he denies the Union to be. In a late speech he declared the Union to be the organ of nothing "but of a set of lobby men and Presidential aspirants about Washington—men who care nothing for anything if they can get the control of the Government to obtain which they know but one way, to devise a system of policy to kill off every man of brains in the country, so that mediocrity may begin in demand, and thus that they could get a chance. He would defy this whole gang of corrupt speculators and speculators, with all the men they can send here, and all their agents that are travelling about the State, and the newspapers they put up."

Yearly Jubilee on Little Mount. Saturday, the 14th inst., was a gala time on that most delightful spot in Northern Ohio, the Little Mount of Lake county. The Independent Order of Good Templars and other Temperance Organizations of Willoughby, Kirtland, Mentor, Painesville, Chagrin Falls, Chardon, etc., to the number of some two thousand, held a grand Pic-Nic and Jubilee—the temperate, the young, and the joyous of both sexes. The weather was clear and cool, and the day spent in listening to speeches by the great Temperance Reformer, John R. Williams, Henry Chace, the "Broad-acre" of Stark, and others; social converse, music, feasting, rambling in the pine woods and shady glens, clambering among the rocks, exploring the cool gorges and caves, and dancing in the Assembly Rooms of the Mountain Houses. Some three hundred and fifty "lads and lasses" formed cotton sets at the same time, and innocent hilarity and good feeling abounded at the jubilee of the Good Templars. Such rural holidays, free from the debasing influence of strong drink, are pleasant and profitable to the young, the middle-aged, and the old.

HAMILTON COUNTY.—The "State of Hamilton" forms two Congressional districts, both represented by dough-face Democrats. The Commercial times in the First the candidate will be T. C. Day, Republican, and G. H. Pendleton, the present member. It says the race between these gentlemen will be a beautiful one. In the Second District matters are more mixed. J. A. Gurley will probably be the candidate of the Opposition, but there is some doubt whether W. S. Groesbeck will receive the nomination of his party for a second term. Alex. Long, who claims to be orthodox on the Leecompton question, is laboring to secure the nomination, and Groesbeck's vote for the Montgomery substitute is a clog on his political heels in a race with the faithful.

We are glad to see that there is to be a united Opposition in Hamilton county. A Convention to consist of 39 delegates is to be held on the 14th of September. This arrangement has been made by the Republican and American Executive Committees, and all voters of the county, without regard to previous political affiliations, who are opposed to the extension of Slavery and the policy of the administration, are cordially invited to take part in the primary meetings and convention. The Gazette says:

"With our forces joined, and a wide awake battle, we can carry everything before us, on the second Tuesday in October."

THE WARRIOR.—The sch. Fame, owned by Mr. Blosser, of Sandusky, capized off Monroe in the gale Tuesday night, has been towed in to Toledo. The mate has not yet been heard from, and it is feared he was lost.

Record of Deaths. Chief Justice John Duer, of New York, died from protracted disease on the 10th, aged 72 years. In 1849 he was elected to the Supreme Court, which position he held until death closed his dignified, upright and honorable career.—Col. B. Atkinson, one of the heroes of Fort Stephenson, died in Lucas County on the 2d inst. He was buried with military honors.—Mrs. Elizabeth Coffinberry, relict of the late George Coffinberry, died at Mansfield recently, aged 88 years. Mrs. C. had a personal knowledge of the hardships consequent upon the Revolutionary struggle, and the war of 1812, having become a resident of Mansfield as early as 1808.—The Rev. Wellington H. Collins, Presiding Elder of the Detroit District, died at Detroit on Wednesday of typhoid fever. He was one of the brightest ornaments of the church in Michigan. At the time of his decease a young son lay at the point of death with the same disease.—The Rev. Samuel P. Skinner, an old, well known, and much esteemed resident of Chicago, formerly pastor of the Universalist Church, and proprietor and editor of the New Commonwealth, died in Philadelphia on Thursday. He remained there taken to Chicago for interment.—Marcus F. Graft, formerly a resident of Sandusky, and well known as Messenger of the American Express Company, died of typhoid fever at Richmond, Ind., on Friday.—Wm. Rawls, Esq., a prominent member of the Philadelphia bar, died last week, aged 70. For a long time he had been reported of the decisions of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.—Mr. Edmund Stewart, a well known and respected citizen of Hamilton, Franklin county, Ohio, died on the 8th of his stroke, aged 47 years.—Charles Burr, Esq., an old and respected citizen of Madison, Lake county, died suddenly on the 7th, aged 61.—Archbishop Walsh died at Halifax on the 11th, aged 54 years.—Mrs. Mary E. Van Hook, of Sandusky county, on the 7th, aged 83. She had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years, and died a few days since at Glenburn, of rapid consumption. She was a lady of cultivation, and well known to the literary world as the translator of Bunge's "Frother and King," and other works.—L. Col. Knight, of Albany, died on the 11th. He formerly commanded several of the Hudson River steamers, and was a social and generous gentleman.—John McDowell, a journeyman of the New York Assembly, died on the 7th, aged 83. He had been confined for the past six years,